

- Conventional methods of mechanical testing are usually based on the use of large specimens. Sampling of the necessary volume of material is in most cases connected with affecting the integrity or even destruction of the assessed component.
- Recently, ÚJV Řež, a. s., has started to pay considerable attention to other perspective methods as a supplementary source of experimental data to foster the process of component degradation evaluation.

